

Abstract of the Disclosure

An article of manufacture which holds a container of drinking fluids, collects its condensation and spilled fluids, and directs them to its self contained reservoir with a device having a upper rim that is taller than the container being held, a device to support the entire height of the held container utilizing its upper funnel and support ribs, a device which stores spilled fluids and condensation within its own self contained reservoir created from a centered vertical support column providing support to the held container away from its spilled fluids as well as creating an area to add weights, a magnet, or lighting to its open bottom end, a holder that can fit in existing cup holders and improve their function, a holder that is portable and machine washable, and a holder that can provide the above stated benefits and be manufactured in one piece.